Affordable Housing Need Grows in Eastern Ontario

New Province –Wide Housing Report Highlights Housing Needs

(Toronto) As Ontario continues its slide into one of the deepest recessions in 50 years, access to affordable rental housing continues to be a problem for many households in Ottawa and Kingston. According to a report released today, tight rental markets and long social housing waiting lists highlight the need for increased investment in affordable housing in order to protect families and create jobs.

The eighth annual edition of Where's Home? A Picture of Housing Needs in Ontario (2008) authored by the Ontario Non-Profit Housing Association (ONPHA) and the Co-operative Housing Federation of Canada (CHF Canada) Ontario Region, analyzes 22 separate housing markets across Ontario.

"One –in –five Ontario tenant households are still spending more than half of their income on housing," said ONPHA Executive Director, Sharad Kerur. "Many of these households are one paycheque away from losing their homes. I am really worried that as the economy moves deeper into recession, more and more households will be forced to choose between paying the rent and other necessities."

"We need to fix the housing we have and build more co-operative and non-profit housing," commented Harvey Cooper, Manager of Government Relations at CHF Canada Ontario Region. "Affordable housing is a natural firewall against poverty – we need more of it."

Where's Home? 2008 shows that rental markets in areas such as Ottawa and Kingston remained tight in 2008. Kingston's vacancy rate decreased substantially in 2008, falling from 3.2% in 2007 to 1.3%. In Ottawa, vacancy rates fell from 2.3% in 2007 to 1.4% in 2008. In both Ottawa and Kingston, increased demand for rental housing combined with low levels of rental production contributed to the decreasing availability of rental housing.

The report's authors estimate that 10,000 additional rental units must be built annually to meet demand in Ontario. Last year, only 3,000 units were produced. In Kingston, only 54 units of rental housing were produced in 2008, contributing to the tight rental market.

Over the last decade, there has been an 8,500 unit net decrease in the total number of rental housing units in Ontario, with many rental units being converted to condominiums or demolished. In Ottawa alone, there are over 3,400 fewer units of rental housing in 2007 than existed in 1997.

Affordability remains an issue in both areas. The report shows that in Kingston and Ottawa, rents outpaced inflation by 40%. Currently, almost 20% of tenants in Ottawa and over 22% of tenants in Kingston spend more than half of their income on rent, a level that forces them to make daily choices between necessities, and that puts them at considerable risk of losing their housing. As the economic condition across the province deteriorates, such households may be at increased risk for housing-induced poverty.

The report argues that a larger inventory of permanently affordable non-profit and co-operative housing would offer low-income households a measure of stability as the economy worsens. Furthermore, the report argues that building new affordable housing can act as an effective stimulus strategy, benefiting Ontario's low-income households and creating jobs in sectors like construction.

"Housing affordability problems are getting worse and Ontario's low and moderate-income households are losing ground," said Harvey Cooper. "While many municipalities are attempting to improve the situation, they can't do it alone. Senior governments have to do their part."

"The time is now. The public wants economic stimulus, energy conservation and poverty reduction. Good housing policies can achieve all three." said Sharad Kerur.

ONPHA and CHF Canada Ontario Region want to see senior governments take a balanced approach to the creation of more affordable housing, combining permanently affordable non-profit and co-op housing, private sector rental, renovation of existing social housing, as well as rent supplements to fill vacant units.
